Lure of the Protea
Where silver rocks reflect the mountain streams,
The Protea holds aloft its stately head - Majestic flower to prompt the thoughts of men, According to their nature and their dreaming.

To some it seems a giant artichoke, While others link it to the ancient god for whom tis named - The ruby glow and allied silky beard evoke the mystery of primeval days;
A traveller, who ranges far from home, will quicken at its sight and yearn And envy sugarbirds, that dip into the gleaming cup, while swaying gently in the wind.

this helmet, that protects a little flower grown upsidedown - a weather-wise mishap that keeps the pollen's undisputed power by rainstorm
